THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 16.

Greedy Jim.

The London Spectator, noticing "Poems written for a Child, by Two Friends," says: The fairy stories in verse are admirable. The story of the fairy why intoxicates herself with the cream of the dairy, goes to sleep in the butter, is made up into a butter pat and swallowed next morning at breakfast by Greedy Jim, and who turns that unfortunate young gentleman into the most violent convulsionaries is told with a vivacity that leaves nothing to be desired. No child will fail to be moved by this very captivating description of a singular and perplexing occurrence:

Greedy Jim is always rude, Pokes his head in every dish; In his hurry to intrude, Swallows bones instead of fish; Swallows bad instead of good; Snatches meat but swallows fat, Greedy Jim, extremely rude, Swallows a whole butter-pat! "Goodness! Jim, don't look so wild!" "Gracious Jim, don't scream so shrill! "What's the matter with the child?"

"Goodness, gracious! are you ill?" Father's getting rather riled, Mother hardly draws her breath— "Goodness! Jim, don't look so wild: Sure you frighten us to death."

Tumbling down and leaping up, Twisting limbs in every shape; Rolling, grov'ling like a pup, Mowing, moping like an ape; Tasting neither bit nor sup, Yelling like an imp in pain; Tumbling down and leaping up, Certainly the boy's insane.

Little have his parents guessed Whence the mightly mischief springs; Men and women much depressed. Recommend a hundred things. But it's hard, if truth's confessed, To find a cure or antidote For-a fairy in your chest,
